HEARD RAPS: Raymond Heard, The Montreal Star's man in Washington, had some unkind words to say yesterday about Richard Nixon, the man who's going to make us forget about Lyndon Johnson, and Spiro Agnew, the man who's going to make us forget about Curtis E. LeMay. See story on page 3.

EUS calls referendum on staying in Society

Engineers will soon settle the much-disputed question of their membership in the Students' Society.

An open meeting of the EUS yesterday voted to put the issue to a referendum, December 4 in response to a petition by 50 members of the Society.

The motion passed stated that, because it is imperative that EUS members be informed on the pros and cons of secession from the Students' Society, and because members have the right to decide by a democratic vote whether they wish to remain in the Students' Society, a referendum should be held within the next month on the question of membership in the Students' Society.

In presenting the motion, Alan Gandell charged that the issue "must be decided now so that we know where we stand. The only way to force the issues to come out is to force a referendum," he said.

Marc Ryan, Engineering representative to the Students' Council, cautioned against holding the referendum prematurely.

"It's not just a question of staying in or out," he said, "right now we are proposing amendments to the constitution; the question is whether we want to stay in with the new structure."

A suggestion was made that the meeting not continue until the EUS executive could present students with the pros and cons of the issues on the grounds that 99% of the people were uninformed, but was ignored.

The original motion was passed with the exception of a clause charging that the EUS executive was withholding information. An amendment deleting this clause was overwhelmingly passed.

The referendum will read, "Resolved: that the Undergraduate students of the Faculty of Engineering, ie. members of the EUS, should withdraw their membership from the Students' Society of McGill University."

In the meantime open meetings to discuss the issue will be held, and the report of the Ad Hoc committee which was set up last spring to evaluate the roles of the EUS and the Students' Society will be presented next week.

Sarna new editor of Course Guide

by RENE SORELL

Lazar Sarna was elected editor-in-chief of Course Guide '69 on the third ballot at an Arts and Science Undergraduate Society executive meeting last night.

Sarna, who was elected by a 4-2 vote based his candidacy on decreased printing costs.

The new editor, a Daily staffer for two years, said Course Guide will serve partly as an adjunct to the administration calendar but will also include detailed evaluations of courses being offered at undergraduate level.

The evaluation is to be undertaken by questionnaire as well as by consultation with honors and majors students. The information derived from these courses will be compiled and further evaluated by computer.

Runners-up in the balloting were Allen Feingold, editor of the Birth Control Handbook, and Donna Chernick, who, like Sarna, put the emphasis on cutting costs. They advocated the publication of Course Guide in two

Students, faculty split seats

by JULIA WELLER

The steering committee of the English Department yesterday adopted a motion that nine students be seated on the committee as representatives of the English Literature Association together with nine faculty members.

The concept of parity however, is to be referred to the next meeting of the English faculty on November 19.

A commission has been set up with 6 members of the E.L.A. to "discuss the question of parity representation and other related principles, including the restructuring of the departmental governmental system". Their report is to be presented by February 15 at the latest.

Until then students can be seated on other decision-making committees "in such a manner as to be determined by the steering committee in its normal function as departmental nominating committee".

Questions under study would include the validity and purpose of student representation and the areas to be represented.

The committee questioned the validity of a student-teacher dichotomy when they were in fact trying to erase the distinctions. No one could define the position of the teaching fellow on the committee, so it was decided to make her a voting member "in limbo".

The experiment in English 100 in which students had a say in choosing their reading matter was discussed.

It led to certain letters in The Star by "irate parents", complaining that the booklist consisted solely of two books by Leonard Cohen, two by Alan Ginsberg, two by James Baldwin, two by Norman Mailer and one by Malcolm X. The books' earthy language was the main point contention.

It was voted to spend $540 on the making of a video-tape of "King Lear", by English 100 students. This could either be shown to successive first-year classes, or the tapes could be erased and remade. The expenditure would mean less funds available for other necessities, such as more tapes. Its value would lie in the "excitement" generated in the would-be producers.

Although the Literary Society is in charge of getting poets to give readings at McGill, the only poet obtained so far has been unable to come due to illness. The matter is therefore being referred to the Visiting Lecturers Committee.

Political science commission meets

Students want voice in hiring

by PEGO BRENNAN

Student participation in the hiring of professors was the main point of contention last night at a meeting of the political science student-faculty commission established to consider student demands for democratization of the section.

Recommendations presented by Frank Furedi, a member of the Political Science Association executive, called for one-third student representation on the political science section committee, together with one teaching assistant and a post-graduate student on the staff hiring committee.

The section comprises four divisions: lecturers, associate professors, assistant professors and full professors.

In the past, hiring has been handled by full professors only. If the PSA's demands are accepted, other faculty members and students would participate in the hiring of professors. The extent of student participation, however, has yet to be determined.

It was mentioned at one point that seven students might sit on the 21-member section committee. One of the functions of this committee would be to review and decide upon a report brought forward by a screening committee concerning the hiring of professors.

Professor Jackson said that seven students on the section committee would be approved by the section staff but that many would object to that much student participation in making appointments. Either the students would have to cut down their demands or be forced to lose full powers as members of the committee.

Jackson was certain that seven students would not be accepted as full voting members and could not speculate whether faculty would even accept student representatives with full staff.

It was a question of more representatives and less power or fewer representatives and more power.

Students indicated a flexible attitude toward the recommendations presented but faculty members were not sure whether any of the students' minimum demands would be approved by other members of the section.

The commission finally decided that the only proportion acceptable was one-third student representation with full voting powers and that this should be discussed separately among both students and faculty.

The PSA has called a meeting for Friday at 1 pm to discuss developments at the commission meeting.

Smoke bombs used to dash demonstrators

SWANQUARTER, N. C. (CUP) —Police hurled smoke bombs into a country courthouse chamber yesterday and then closed the doors, trapping and almost suffocating 20 black school students occupying the courthouse in a protest against the country welfare board.

The 20 students had dashed into the courthouse from the front ranks of a crowd of 300 persons. The group was protesting a Welfare Department threat to cut off payments unless a three-month school boycott was called off. The crowd gathered at the courthouse after following a patrol car carrying five youths arrested during a march to a neighbourhood high school.

The school boycott began in September when black grade-schoolers were assigned to all-white elementary schools. The parents involved are demanding that white students be bussed to black schools instead.

volumes, one to be available by June 1 and the other to be completed by August 31.

Evaluations would have been carried out in co-operation with professors as well as students, with processing to be done by computer.

Paul Saul, another applicant for the post, advocated the formation of a course guide that would enunciate student criticisms and recommendations for revised subject courses.

According to Saul, much of the criticism would have been derived from campus organizations currently seeking revised course content. Another applicant, Steve Cohen, favored the use of specialized questionnaire forms, one written specifically for arts students, another for science students.

Two other candidates, Graham Reynolds and Mary Kay Minkler, withdrew their names from the ballot before the vote was taken.

Students seek amnesty for UCONN faculty

STORRS, CONN. (CUPI) — Over 100 students occupied the administration centre of the University of Connecticut Monday to demand amnesty for four faculty members and eight students charged by the administration with obstructing Dow Chemical Company recruitment on the campus October 30.

The 12 are threatened with disciplinary action and suspension for their role in a Dow protest which forced cancellation of the company's recruitment procedures.

Administrative work continued throughout the occupation and no attempts were made to evict the demonstrators.

Students say the 12 were singled out of the original protest group of 100 because of their history of anti-war action. Edward V Gant, the school's provost, said the charge against them resulted from their refusal to leave a room where a recruitment interview was being conducted despite their "full knowledge" that the action violated university regulations.

Since the Dow protest, administration officials have cancelled scheduled placement interviews on campus by the Grumman Aircraft Company and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Star correspondent Heard:

Agnew–threat to sanity

by DAVID TUROFF

Raymond Heard, Washington correspondent of the Montreal Star, yesterday gave McGill students a depressing analysis of the political scene in the United States.

Speaking before an audience of over a hundred, he offered a summation of the recent campaign and election by saying, "The year started with hope in New Hampshire and ended with Richard Nixon, and with Spiro Agnew only a heartbeat away from the Presidency and the nuclear button."

Agnew, said Heard, is the biggest threat to sanity in Washington.

The correspondent had no kind words for any of the three major candidates in the election.

Nixon, he said, "pandered to white backlash and prattled nonsense about 'law and order'",

"Nixon has a lot against him," he continued, "mainly his record."

Speaking specifically about Nixon's record, Heard said, "Nixon played games with (Joe) McCarthy".

"I shed no tears for Hubert Humphrey; his defeat is a defeat for Johnson and a defeat for Daley," said Heard.

Heard was in Chicago during the Democratic National Convention, and was tear-gassed and beaten.

Heard said he agreed with Prime Minister Trudeau that there was a possibility of civil disorders mushrooming into civil war in the United States, but added it was a violation of protocol for Trudeau to have made the statement.

Heard himself, however, said there were two potential revolutions in the United States that would have to run their respective courses during the next four years: the Black revolution and the revolution of the young, affluent, but disillusioned and cynical middle class.

However, he said, although prospects are "bleak", there are two encouraging results of the election: that "George Wallace proved to be a paper tiger", and that the United States has avoided a constitutional crisis. Wallace, having carried only five states, had only one more state than Senator Strom Thurmond had twenty years ago, he declared.

In response to a question as to why Americans consistently pick third-raters for Presidents, he said "I guess because so many people get bumped off."

He answered a question about Nixon's intentions with the Supreme Court by saying "I think Warren will try to survive for four more years."

Stanford studies relation with Research Institute

by PHIL SEMAS

Collegiate Press Service

STANFORD, Calif. – Stanford University may be moving toward a change in its relationship with the Stanford Research Institute (SRI), known to do military research.

Acting Stanford president Robert J. Glaser, has set up a committee of five faculty members, five students, and two administrators to study Stanford's relationship with SRI. The Institute is an independent, non-profit organization affiliated with the University.

Glaser's announcement came shortly after the Stanford chapter of Students for a Democratic Society had demanded that the university, SRI and "all members of the university community immediately halt all military and economic projects and operations concerned with Southeast Asia."

SDS nailed its demands to the door of the Board of Trustees office. It also demanded that all contracts, classified and unclassified, be made public, including the value of the contract and individuals performing the work; that Stanford and SRI trustees make public all their corporate and government connections; and that Stanford faculty also make public their corporate and government connections.

Glaser claimed his decision to call for the study had nothing to do with SDS's demands.

SDS seems to have little support among the student body. A rally they held to support the demands drew only about 200 of Stanford's 11,300 students. And a Stanford Daily poll, based on a computer-selected sample of 123 students, showed only 23.5 per cent of the student body support the SDS demands, 66 per cent oppose them and 10.5 per cent are undecided.

Stanford student president Denis Hayes would also like to see some changes in campus war research. At a meeting held shortly after Glaser announced his study, Hayes asked the Board of Trustees to use their influence to get SRI to refuse to accept new research contracts involving chemical, biological, or counter-insurgency warfare research until the study is completed.

In making its demands, SDS charged that SRI does chemical and biological warfare research, including tear gas and crop defoliation; has a staff of 55 doing counter-insurgency work in Thailand since 1962; is performing cost analyses of alternative bombing sites in North Viet Nam; and is doing long-range surveys of investment opportunities in Southeast Asia for U. S. corporations.

In a study published last December, Viet Report magazine documented some of the war research being done at SRI.

SRI has denied only that it is studying bombing sites in North Viet Nam. Rudolph Brunsvold, SRI's vice president of planning and co-ordination, says, "As an institution we don't take a view on the rightness or wrongness of the established government."

About half of SRI's projects are initiated from within the Institute, which has a research staff of 1,836. The other half are taken on contract from government agencies or corporations. Any researcher may decline to work on a certain project, according to SRI officials.

Days of reckoning

Only in Québec can a government practise the most outrightly repressive social policies with impunity and only risk getting toppled over the seizure of 9,528 bottles of liquor in a back alley.

This most recent crisis for the Bertrand government comes at a time when its continued existence is put further in doubt by defections of members, general dissension in party ranks and upsets in the Legislature's balance of power. It seems more than likely we will have a provincial election in the spring. Bertrand has already made significant changes in the Union Nationale, and it will not be quite the same party with the same policy that enters that election.

Bertrand's assumption of the leadership signalled the long-awaited defeat of the party's right wing and the rise in favor of men like Marcel Masse, and, to some extent, Jean-Guy Cardinal. Bertrand is an honest conservative, whose politics are more faithful to the original 1930's reform movement that brought the UN to power than to the Duplessis era of near-fascism. Under Bertrand, the possibility exists that the UN will move towards becoming a party of social conservatism rather than naked reaction.

In fact, that trend was discernable even in the latter part of the Daniel Johnson administration. Johnson tried to attract several left-wing liberals to the UN after 1965 – the most interesting offer (and one that received no real coverage in the media) was to Robert Cliche, head of the Québec NDP, Charles Taylor and Charles Gifford (also NDPers). All three were promised cabinet posts. They resisted the temptation.

The only man Johnson succeeded in attracting was Marcel Masse.

Now, Bertrand has done a quick cosmetic job on a rather dubious figure in Montréal's not-so-healthy municipal political scene, John Lynch-Staunton, and is furiously trying to set him up as another Eric Kierans. Lynch-Staunton, should he win, will probably get the Financial Institutions portfolio, or even Finance itself.

Daniel Johnson's secret offers and Bertrand's dredging up Lynch-Staunton signal a major shift in the UN's policies. Since the Liberals are disintegrating rapidly because of the departure of men such as Lévesque and Kierans, the UN is trying to lure the English vote away from its traditional refuge in the Liberal party. Bertrand has made statements in the Legislature and at the recent federal-provincial conference that are clearly aimed at stilling the fears of the English minority.

Should Bertrand succeed in cleaning up the Union Nationale, it's entirely probable that the English vote will begin to swing to him. St. James Street has been allied with the UN before so no discomfiture will take place there, and as the English community hardens its views in reaction to the growth of Lévesque's strength it will seek to ally itself with the most conservative elements of the province.

Apart from the fact that he might not be able to hang on much longer, there is another reason why a spring election would look attractive to Bertrand. Lévesque may not have had sufficient time to build any significant strength to fulfill his prediction that he will hold the balance of power in the next Legislature.

Pressed on all sides by a growing prise de conscience among the Québécois, faced with the slump of the Liberal Party, the English confront the first crisis of where to swing their bloc of votes in order to best insure their survival.

If they vote Liberal, they face the possibility of leaving the balance of power to Lévesque.

If they vote Union Nationale they go through the unpleasant experience of making a distasteful alliance fraught with dangers.

If Lévesque clears a significant vote, the English community will contract into a crisis mentality, and the real bitterness will begin to appear.

Should the election come this spring, it will be the first of many days of reckoning for the English in Québec.

A change has come over Senate since the students cam the heady experience of polarization.

The students have largely played by the rules too. B from the first moments of the first meeting of the new S others "Mr." they have very carefully staked out new ter fully reasonable that St. James St-oriented Vice Princi Robert Shaw could compliment them on an excellent p sentation. But the position the Senate of McGill Univers had just taken was more advanced than that of UGEQ.

On October 18, the first open Senate meeting in McGil history was about to vote on a statement of position on t CEGEP crisis. The meeting had been called as a result o demand by the Students' Society that Senate take a stro stand in support of the CEGEP students all across Queb who had occupied their schools to demonstrate their gr

by ROBERT CHODOS

But the statement, prepared by consensus politici
Saul Frankel, Vice-Dean of Social Sciences, was a caref evasion of the issues at hand, designed to please all of t widely divergent factions on Senate. And Ian Hyman, Exte nal Vice-President of the Students' Society, wanted to t the assembled senators that what they were about to do w not what the students had had in mind at all. Senate, ho ever, decided to vote first before hearing him.

The statement was approved, with the only disagre who thought it was too radical. Hyman then got up and t probably the first time that Senate's emperors had ever be told to their faces that they were naked. But its effect on S

Three and a half weeks later, there was another op

Sir,

The McGill Bookstore has a policy of "we will not knowingly be undersold" As it stands this policy is simply a gimmick and doesn't do a bit of good. If it was in fact effective prices at McGill would be the same as or lower than in any other bookstore. But McGill is quite often undersold.

Out of three psychology books which I compared at the University of Montreal bookstore, I found only one was less expensive at McGill and this was only by 18c on a $6.00 book after the 3% reduction. The two other books, Differential Psychology by Anastasi and Motivation by Bindra and Stewart sell for $9.95 and $2.50 at McGill while at U de M they are only $7.95 and $1.85 respectively – this is 17% and 23% less at U de M even after the 3% reduction.

The policy is meaningless because it is equivalent to saying "catch me rooking you and I sell you the book at the same price as someone else." You don't even get a prize for catching them. Why should a student run around comparing prices before buying a book? If he does happen to see a book selling for less somewhere else he buys it there and doesn't bother wasting his time telling the bookstore. Therefore unless a person or a group of people is responsible for comparing prices with other stores the bookstore will very seldom be forced to lower its price even if it is being undersold.

The policy is deceitful in another way. In fact it is a lie. It should read "we will not be undersold by two or more bookstores" which is McGill's actual policy. In effect McGill can knowingly be undersold. While it is improbable that the Bookstore will ever be forced to lower its price under its ostensible policy, under the actual policy the probability approaches zero. That the Bookstore does not take itself seriously was made evident to me when I gave them the names of two stores which were selling a book for less than McGill. They were surprised that I should want to waste their time telling them this.

While I am on the topic I would also like to express my wonder at the fact that McGill can only make a 3% net profit. With a gross profit of 22% and no rent to pay it is astonishing that expenses should be so high as to make more than 3% profit. If the McGill Bookstore paid rent it would probably lose money.

James were dead, d turn in his grave position that such bodies be made up of equal numbers of students, faculty and administrators.

This led to a ninety-minute discussion of student participation in the selection of Deans and the larger question of a student say in the hiring and firing of all administrators and faculty before Senate finally took its traditional way out – it referred the whole matter to a committee. But meanwhile several faculty representatives expressed themselves in support of the student position. And at one point – before the vote was taken – student senator Harry Edel said that Senate's traditional way out wasn't good enough; that this was a question of principle and Senate should take a stand.

Some of the exchanges that arise are no doubt horrifying to administrators who remember Senate meetings in the old days. When it was proposed that McGill recommend that the new University Council (the subject of Bill 57) include representatives of the arts, professions and business, Edel suggested that business be deleted. Senator S. M. Finlayson, Chairman of the Board of Canadian Marconi no doubt spoke for many of his colleagues when he admitted his inability to understand the reasons behind Edel's suggestion, but Edel missed the opportunity to give the administrators a crash course in political theory.

Such a course is badly needed. Monday night's motion on the selection of Deans was a surprise to the students, and hence they were not as effective as they might have been and in fact were on other issues. But still, most of the other senators were no match for them in debate. For the first time, faculty and administrators are being forced to deal with basic issues, and their ability to do so intelligently has yet to be proved. They will be put on the spot again soon. At the October 31 meeting, the student senators made notice of motions on several potentially explosive questions, like student discipline, student housing and the grading system. These did not come up Monday night because Senate ruled that the meeting was a continuation of the last one. The next meeting will be a new one and it could be heated.

It isn't quite a question of the eight students on one side and the rest of Senate on the other, but it's close. Votes are rarely 54-8; they are more likely to be something like 51-11. Samuel Noumoff and Archie Malloch, both expert players-by-the-rules, regularly vote with the students, and liberal faculty like Robert Vogel, P. R. Wallace and Svenn Orvig have supported them on specific issues. So has Academic Vice Principal Michael Oliver. But on the whole, the gulf is deep and wide. S. M. Finlayson is not the only one who doesn't understand; the outbursts of Leo Yaffe and the unbroken silence of most of his colleagues are both indications of the depth of the mistrust.

This has serious implications for the position of the students. It means that it is highly unlikely that they will be able to get very many motions, aside from the relatively innocuous, through Senate. And hence if their goal is the implementation of a whole series of specific reforms, they are doomed to failure.

But there is another purpose to having students on Senate, and one that should begin to assume greater importance in the students' minds. The October CEGEP fiasco is only one of many instances in which Senate has dealt with an important issue by postponing its consideration or by coming up with a meaningless compromise. The whole matter of how McGill students learn has not been dealt with. Neither have large questions relating to this University's position in Quebec.

The students can make sure that Senate discusses important issues. They can pressure Senate into taking stands that mean something. When Senate acts against the interests of the students, they can make sure that everyone knows it. They can elicit clear statements of position from both sympathetic and unsympathetic senators.

They have already issued a serious challenge to Senate. If they follow through on that challenge, Senate, and perhaps the University, will be changed beyond recognition.

Scribblemania

"Burn, Scribe, burn!" These were the words that reverberated throughout the thousands of spectators that attended the titanic clash between Med 11 and the Grads for the austere Scribe Trophy in Intramural Touchfootball.

Some 9700 fans witnessed the spectacle which was played in weather fit for pigs. The field resembled a swamp, and thus, the footing was very poor. Notwithstanding all this, the fans thoroughly enjoyed the tilt as they envisaged their vaunted King of Predicamenters, the Priceless One, endure his first setback.

Early lead for Grads

For the first half of play, the Scribe and his mate, Scribess 11, exhibited their flamboyant repertoire as the Grads bounced to an early 6-zip lead. Mixing their plays well, the Grads scored on a short toss to "Podzy" – their defence contained the awesome power of Med 11 and as the half came to a close, the Roote intercepted a Small pass that killed a Med 11 drive. The refereeing was inept and inadequate on several plays but this evened up in the end.

In the second half, the Med 11 contingent flexed its latent power and began to cream the Grads. Small, whose play was affected by the poor signal-calling, finally got control of himself and played the game that he is capable of. He directed his attack well, using short flares to his halfbacks, and thus broke the backs of the valiant Grads.

The turning point in the match came when the Grads went for a third and ten from their own 13 with some six and a half minutes left – this was an incredible play since they were only behind 7-6 at the time. They folded, and the great QB piloted another TD. Final Score: Med 11 20 - Grads 6.

Price bats .875

And thus, my faithful horde, the Dynamic Duo attempted to the nearly impossible – make 8 successive predicaments. We came very close, but alas, my friends, we flaked out. Therefore, our record stands at 7/8. It is indeed a fair record, but the black-and-blue Scribester machine is raring to go for the fall season which begins on Monday. Several things will be the same: Law to be the powerhouse in Ice Hockey and Floor Hockey; the Plumbers to bring up their perennial rear.

Before we say adieu to the touchfootball season, one happy task still remains – the selection of the All-Scibe teams. The Scribe's personal secretary has sent letters out to all the team captains and the refs in which they fill in their All-Scribe teams. The choices should be returned to the Intramural office as soon as possible. Whether the teams will be really indicative of the best in the league, will depend on the number of entries received. Remember, it's your choice, so don't bitch afterwards.
